TODAY'S ODDITY

FAIRFIELD, Montana, June 6—UP—It's a far cry from rough and ready Montana farming to the throne of a castle in old Erin but Pat Walsh, with the adaptability of his race, made the jump in a span of eight months, when he sold his Fairfield ranch last fall and acquired a 213 acre estate including a bona-fide castle in which he now reigns supreme.

SCOUT CAMP TO OPEN AT LONG BARN ON JUNE 16

'ROUND 'N' 'ROUND

And the battle is still on.

* * * *

Two days ago a redheaded baseball player came in with a wail of woe about how the famous "Iron Man" had pulled a pinch hitter out of the stands.

* * * *

And the pinch hitter hit a home run with two men on bases to win the game.

* * * *

And the redheaded player said he lost fifteen bucks on the game.

* * * *

Now, it's the "Iron Man's" time at bat.

* * * *

Every detail of the story was true—the Iron Man said with the exception of a few little details.

* * * *

Said details are—

* * * *

He didn't pull the pinch hitter out of the stands. He is a regular member of the team and had been sitting on the player's bench.

* * * *

And the Iron Man says he didn't tell the hitter to go into the game.

* * * *

He merely suggested that now would be a good time for a pinch hitter—and his maanger acted upon the suggestion.

* * * *

And the red-headed player didn't lose fifteen bucks—he only lost [illegible] rumors.

* * * *

And furthermore the Iron Man makes the suggestion that the redhead call a meeting of the managers of the teams.

* * * *

And still furthermore, the Iron Man wants to know what the redhead is crying about.

* * * *

The pinch hitter should have walked. He didn't, so that was the redhead's hard luck.

* * * *

And still further, the Iron Man says all of the players on his team reside in Richmond.

* * * *

In other words, folks, stick around. It looks as if the fireworks are just starting.

* * * *

THEATER MAN WINS LONG BATTLE

LOS ANGELES, June 6.—UP—Alexander Pantages, who ran a Klondike grub stake to millions of dollars in the theater business, was freed from the county jail late today on $100,000 bail after the state supreme court decided he might have his liberty while awaiting the result of an appeal of his conviction on a charge of assaulting a dancer.

Pantages, who was talking to some friends when the word was brought to him, appeared surprised at first, and then wept.

To Go Home

"It can't be true," he said several times.

He said the first thing that he wanted to do was to go home, then go to the saniarium where his wife, Lois Pantages, is resting. Mrs. Pantages was convicted of manslaughter a few weeks before the trial, but was given probation on account of ill health. Her case resulted from the death of a Japanese, whose automobile was hit by Mrs. Pantages' car.

Pantages has been confined in the Los Angeles county jail since November 9, 1929, when a superior court jury found him guilty of attacking Eunice Pringle, a 17 year old girl, who called at his [illegible] office to try and book her [illegible] act on the Pantages [illegible] circuit.

[illegible] charged that the [illegible] conspiracy by Miss Pringle [illegible] others to blackmail him, [illegible] diately appealed the case.

Suit Filed.

A short time after Pantages went to jail, Miss Pringle sued him for $1,000,000, claiming that the notoriety of the trial had ruined her life.

Pantages' attorneys started a move to secure freedom on bail. They contended that the theater man had suffered heart attacks in jail, and that his physical condition was such that he would die in confinement. The superior court however, and the court of appeals denied the bail.

Pantages' bail plea to the supreme court was made on two grounts.

Heart Trouble

First—That he was suffering from heart disease and was so ill that further incarceration would result in permanent injury to his health and possible death.

Second—That damage suits for a large sum of money, filed by the complaining witness and other witnesses in the trial in which he was convicted were then pending against him and that he needed his liberty to prepare his defense.

In commenting on Pantages' physical condition the court held that there was an overwhelming weight of evidence to show that his condition was so serious that "his health and life both are endangered."

FIREMEN NINE WINS TWO GAMES

The Richmond Firemen won two games from the Standard Oil nine yesterday afternoon — one by default and the other by a score of 17 to 3.

The athletic fire-fighters had a fine time whacking the sphere over the high school diamond yesterday. Hathaway suddenly deve'oped into a great hitter for the Firemen by collecting a homer, a triple, and a single. Two base hits were gathered by Marten, Grady, Johnny Huzefka and Murphy and Bonham of the Standard Oil.

Steve Huzefka kept the Standard Oil sluggers making bad guesses and allowed five hits, two walks, and struck out four.

"Red" Newel made a feeble effort at chucking for the Standard Oil squad and was replaced near the end of the first inning by Pat O'Rourke after allowing four hits, one walk, and fanning no Firemen.

Pat found out that he was a better second baseman than a pitcher and was nicked for four hits, and two walks. He earned no strikeouts. Bonham went into the box for the Standard Oil at the beginning of the third, and allowed five hits, one walk, and baffled two Firemen.

The box score:

Trojans Take Lead In Meet At Chicago

CHICAGO, June 6.—UP—Southern Ca'ifornia's Trojans, winners of the I. C. 4-A last week-end and one of the greatest track teams ever corralled in one institution took a commanding position in the annual national collegiate track and field games this afternoon by qua'ifying eleven men in the preliminary events.

It seems impossible that any team can muster enough points tomorrow to beat out the invaders from the west coast, well balanced enough to score in 11 of the 15 events of the I. C. 4-A, last weekend. The Trojans seemed as much of a cinch to win the team honors tomorrow as did Lee Sentman of Illinois to take down the individua' honors.

Sentman qualified with victories in both the low and high hurdles today and the broad jump.

He was high point man in the Big Ten teams two weeks ago with 12 points and was the on'y man toda yto qualify in three events. After running both the hurdles, he went over into the field section didn't even take off his outer wraps took one jump and qualified in the broad jump.

Simpson easily won both the 100 and 220 yard dash preliminary heats today and he covered the century in :09.6 on a track which the horse racing writers probably would call slow.

George is determined to start from "too holes" and beat the world's record of :09.5 seconds in the century, now held by Eddie Tolan, Michigan, whom he has beaten every time but once in their more than a dozen starts.

Harlow Rothert, Stanford, turned in an impressive performance in the shot-put with a mark of 51 feet, 1 3-4 inches, and also qualified in the discus. Tomorrow he will be trying to better the world's record of 52 feet, 7 1-4 inches held by Emil Hirshfield of Germany.

In team competition of the preliminary, Ohio State and Illinois rank second to Southern California by qualifying six men apiece. Another invader from the coast Washington, unexpectedly leaped into fourth place with five qualifiers.

Belmont Race Will Be Run At N. Y. Today

NEW YORK, June 6.—UP—Two of the greatest three year olds that ever looked each other in the eye in a big stake race will meet tomorrow in the classic Be'mont.

Harry Payne Whitney's Whichone and William Woodward's Gallant Fox are to settle the question of three year old supremacy in what is recognized by turf-men as the finest test of all, this mile and one half around the picturesque oval at Be'mont park.

There will be two, possibly three other starters in the race, Walter J. Salmon's Swinfield, Jim Butler's Questionnaire, and possibly Gallant Fox's stable-mate, The good filly, Flying Gal.

Fox Entered

But the race is conceded to the Derby winner, and Whichone, juvenile captain of 1929. This pair has not met since last year, when Whichone carried off the honors, but "the Fox's" record for the current racing season is better than that of the big Whitney colt, which declined the issue in the Preakness and Kentucky derby.

It may prove more than a dual of thoroughbreds, for the riders of Whichone and Gallant Fox are two of the outstanding jockies of the age, Sonny Workman, who wears the silks of Whitney, and Earl Sande, greatest rider of modern times.

Sande Cut

What came close to marring the spectacle, an accident in which Sande was cut by flying glass while enroute to the track early today, will not affect the plucky rider. Sande, his hands and face bandaged, breezed Gallant Fox at Belmont this morning a few hours after the automobile crash in which he was slightly hurt, and announced he would be fit and ready for tomorrow's test.

The odds favor Whichone which is expected to start at 4 to 5 with Gallant Fox quoted at 6 to 5. Questionnaire at 15 to 1 and Swinfield at 30 to 1.

CUBS CONTINUE WINNING STREAK

By UNITED PRESS

NATIONAL LEAGUE—

Chicago's "crippled" Cubs moved into Brooklyn Friday and convinced the Brooklyn Robins that they are an important factor in the Nat'onal league pennant race.

The Cubs continued their inspired play of the past fortnight and won their ninth straight game, drubbing the league leaders, 13 to 0.

Charlie Root turned in his best pitching performance of the year, and held the slugging Robins to two hits, both of which came in the fourth inning.

The victory advanced the Cubs to within one game of the lead.

Adam Comorosky's home run in the ninth inning gave Pittsburgh a 4 to 3 decision over the Boston Braves and advanced the Pirates to third p'ace, a single point ahead of St. Louis and New York.

The New York Giants ran their winning streak to six straight today, defeating the St. Louis Cardina', 10 to 7. The defeat dropped the Cards from second place to a tie with the Giants for fourth.

Philadelphia blasted the offerings of three Cincinnati pitchers for 16 hits, eleven of them for extra bases, and defeated the Reds, 14 to 5. Denny Southern led the attack with four doubles and a single in five times at bat.

The victory advanced the Phillies from eighth place to a tie with the Reds for seventh.

AMERICAN LEAGUE—

The Phi'adelphia Athletics increased their lead to a game and a half Friday when they beat the St. Louis Browns, 5 to 4, while the second place Washington Senators were idle because of rain at Detroit.

C'eveland's Indians took a firmer grip on third place when they pounded Danny MacFayden for 10 hits to beat the Poston Red Sox, 9 to 4. A five-run rally after two men were out in the eighth inning gave Cleveland the victory.

The Yankees-White Sox game at Chicago was postponed on account of wet grounds.

Oaks Defeat Seattle As Stars Win

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—UP—An impressive drive of the Los Angeles Ange's toward the top of the Pacific Coast league was halted by Hollywood today when the Sheiks won both games of a double header with the Angels.

Shortly before seven o'clock tonight Hol'ywood made one run in the first of the eleventh inning to capture the second contest, 11 to 10, and push the Angels into third place because the San Francisco Seals had taken second position with an 11 to 3 victory over the San Francisco Missions.

Ho'lywood had won the first game, 6 to 3, by scoring three runs in the first of the ninth. In the next game the Sheiks came from behind to tie the score and then twice forged ahead only to have the Angels force a deadlock in the last half of each inning.

The league-leading Sacramento Senators sent their hurling ace, Tony Freitas, against the Portland Beavers and they won, 14 to 2, holding an advantage o ver the Seals of two full games.

Oakland also came back to beat Seattle, 8 to 5, and was less than ha'f a game behind Los Angeles.

ELKS LEAGUE STARTS SOON

The Richmond Elks will once more enter into state baseball competition this year.

The league will probably start about July 13.

Fred L. Krumb of Alameda is chairman of the state committee. Members of the Elks baseball board are: J. M. Etienne, Pasadena; H. H. Lilly, Sacramento; George Rumbold, Taft; Jack F. Hosfield, San Bernardino; William Yount, Redlands; Jack Hageman, Hollister; Stanley Hess, Long Beach; Henry Wurkheim, San Francisco, and Wa'ter Nagle, Santa Rosa.

Athletics Win Final Contest At St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, June 6.—UP—George Earnshaw came to the aid of the Athletics in the last half of the ninth today with two out and the tieing and winning runs on base and fanned Heinie Manush, giving the A's the final game of the series, 5 to 4. It was the eleventh victory for the A's in 12 games.

After trailing 5 to 2, the Browns got to Mahaffey in the ninth for two doubles and a single, scoring two runs before he was re'ieved.

Philadelphia bunched hits to score. Maheffey hit a homer in the second with none on.

FREE AND EASY DRAWS LARGE CROWDS

Plenty of familiar faces may be seen in "Free and Easy," which closes tonight at the Fox-California theater for Mero-Goldwyn-Mayer who made liberal use of its stars, players and directors in casting this all-talking comedy extravaganza which is a laugh from start to finish.

The story is that of a beauty prize-winner who comes all the way from Kansas with her mother and manager for the purpose of becoming a moving picture star. When a celebrated actor attempts to take advantage of her innocence under the guise of helping her to get a screen test, things look pretty black but with the help of her hefty mother and the somewhat absent-minded but willing manager everything is brought to a happy climax and the girl, although she does not get a part in pictures, gets a husband instead.

Edward Sedgwick, who directed the production, obviously had his tongue in his cheek and has given the most serious occurrences a burlesque air which has the spectator rolling in his seat. The scenes in which Karl Dane, for instance, is blown into the air when a charge of dynamite is set off at the wrong moment, or Miss Friganza rehearses a cave-woman stunt, or Keaton appears in the midst of a lavish revue in what apparently is something resembling a dirigible, have not been rivaled for sheer, unadulturated good humor.

There ars several good songs, sung in the picture, one called "Free and Easy" having all the original catchiness of a musical comedy hit, while "Oh King, Oh Queen" boasts the novelty of having no more lyrics than those in the title, the significance of the words being indicated by gestures and facial expressions.

All of the members of the large cast do excellent work, Keaton being particularly intriguing in his first talking work, while Miss Friganza as the mother, and Anita Page as the beauty-prize winner are in first-rate form.

Also on the program is Charlie Chase in "Fifty Million Husbands."

Pre-nuptial Pact Declared Invalid

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—UP—A pre-nuptial contract that provided for any emergencies "from divorce until death" was declared invalid by Superior Judge Frank H. Dunne here today when he ruled that Arthur Ze'lerbach, brother of I. Zellerbach, industrial leader, must pay his estranged wife $300 a month temporary alimony.

Judge Dunne declared the agreement by Zellerbach and his wife before their marriage in 1928 which set the limit on alimony at $100 a month, was contrary to public policy.

The contarct was introduced by Zellerbach's attorney.

FAST FARCE AT THE RICHMOND TONIGHT

Glenn Tryon, co-star of "Skinner Steps Out" rollicking Universal farce comedy with dialogue now at the Richmond theater has no trouble at all amusing himself between pictures.

Tryon has enough hobbies for half a dozen men. He likes to putter around his garden, planting flowers and taking care of them.

He is extremely fond of hunting and fishing. His collection of rifles and rods constitutes one of his most cherished professions. His love for the outdoors also manifests itself in horseback rides and long walks in the country.

Water and boats also are Tryon favorites. He is always planning a long yacht cruise to distant lands —and always his screen work necessitates a postponement of the cherished plan.

He also is an enthusiastic motorist. He owns two cars, one of expensive, the other of inexpensive make. He is fonder of the inexpensive one, which he has fitted up with every kind of accessory.

Music is another of his hobbies. He plays the 'celo' violin, trombone and cornet—but not with such dexterity as to forfeit his amateur standing, he asserts.

Tryon displays some of the best acting of his career in "Skinner Steps Out". Beautiful titian-haired Merna Kennedy again appears as his leading lady. She is costarred with him. William James Craft directed the picture, which is based on one of Henry Irving Dodge's famous "Skinner" stories.

BRITISH SURE OF MASTERING INDIA RIOTS

By WEBB MILLER
(U. P. Staff Correspondent)
(World Copyright, 1930, U. P.)

SIMLA, India, June 6.—UP—Lord Irwin of Kirby Underdale, charged with the government of 320,000,000 persons as viceroy of India, appears cooly confident of mastering the situation which has arisen from the Indian campaign for self government.

He received me at the vice-regal lodge this afternoon and discussed conditions for more than an hour. Although prevented by his official position from granting interviews for publication, he very readily talked of the government's attitude; for the purpose of furnishing background and perspective.

The viceroy, who rules a country more than twice as populous as the United States, with power unequalled by any other political executive in the world, is tall, spare and kindly-looking, with a rugged visage.

Asks Questions

Lord Irwin questioned me at length regarding my impressions as an American after more than three weeks in India. He asked me especially about the violent scenes I witnessed at the Dharasana and Wadala salt depots near Bombay, and about the Moslem outbreak in the Bendhi bazaar in that city. He also was curious concerning my conversations with leaders of the Indian National congress, the organization to which Ghandi and his volunteers largely belong.

I have been informed that at a suitable time after publication of Sir John Simon's report on India's present political capacities the British government probably will make a statement designed to banish misconceptions which have arisen in India regarding the functions of the round table meeting to be held in London next October. This statement may be made in England, or, perhaps, during the viceroy's speech to the special session of the legislative assembly scheduled at Simla for July 7.

Meantime, I am precisely informed that the British government is not ready to promise a form of dominion status at the round table conference, that a campaign of terrorism and violence is expected from National exeremists, that the government does not consider releasing the Mahatma Ghandi unless he withdraws from the civil disobedience drive he launched, and that the authorities are not unduly worried over the manner in which the situation is likely to unfold.

New Powers

The planned statement is designed to define more fully the objectives of the round table conference and to fix its position definitely as a stage in India's advance toward self government. Its purpose is to allay reports, allegedly fostered by the Nationalist congress, characterizing the congress as a mere resultless occasion for debate.

The government's attitude, as explained to me, is that the present agitation undoubtedly is inspired by real Nationalistic aspirations, but that the methods used constitute lawlessness, which must be suppressed, even if it is necessary to invoke new powers to do so.

Ulceration Of Stomach

By DR. G. A. ESTERBERG
(A Continuation From Last Week's Article)

When the blood remains for a time in the stomach and is mixed with the food it may be greatly changed, but the vomiting of a large quantity of blood is very characteristic of ulcer. Convulsions may follow. Death nearly occurs directly from hemmorrhage. Anemia may be produced. In either the stomach or duodenal ulcers, more commonly the latter, the blood may be passed in the stools and not be vomited. This may occur when the hemmorrhage is slight, but also it is profuse enough to produce anemia and a complete collapse.

Profuse, even fatal hemmorrhage may come from small superficial ulcers. Probably it is from such that in elderly persons profuse hemmorrhage occurs without previous gastric symptoms. Pain is perhaps the most constant and distinctive feature of ulceration. It varies greatly in character. It may be only gnawing or burning sensations, which is felt when the stomach is empty and is relieved when food is taken.

But the more characteristic form comes on with the most intense pain .The pain is not only felt in the pit of the stomach but radiates to the sides and back. These attacks are more frequently induced by taken food, and they may recur at a variable period after eating, and then again as late as two or three hours. The attack may occur at intervale with great intensity for weeks or months at the time, and then again it may disappear for a long time.

Perforation occurs in about six percent of all cases. The accute perforating is more common in women than in men.

The post mortem observations show that a very large number of ulcers will heal completely, with the proper treatment. But the process is slow and tedious, often requiring months, in severe cases.

Duolenal ulcer, sometimes simulate gastric ulcer, but more often it produces symptoms which are apt to be mistaken for gall--stones the pain being referred to a spot about an inch below the tip of the ninth rib. As a rule the pain in cases of duodenal ulcer bears a definite relationship to food, being greatest when the patient is beginning to be hungry, and a considerable relief is felt by the taken of food.

Then again one meets with patients who have pain the moment they take food, in whom vomiting after eating is persistent. The vomiting and gastric pain may be due to anemia, in these cases.

The course of the disease is, in the majority of cases, chronic. Only in a few instances does the disease run an accute course.

A specific disease energy is always found with stomach ulcers. When this specific disease is conquered the ulcer will heal, though the healing process will be slow.

HOOVER DEFYS NAVY PACT GROUP

WASHINGTON, June 6.—UP—President Hoover today defied the senate foreign relations committee access to secret papers belonging to the London naval treaty, and cited precedents by President Washington and President Harding in support of his refusal.

Secretary of State Stimson said suspicion of secret understandings or American indiscretions was "nonsense."

Stimson informed Chairman Borah of the President's decision, and explained Mr. Hoover believed delivery of some papers called for through Borah by Johnson, Repn., Calif., would be incompatible with the public interest.

Observers tonight saw in this action the basis for a bitter controversy. Johnson refused comment today, preferring to stand on his statement of yesterday that every senator should resent efforts to coerce early treaty action by the senate before its members have had complete information and ample time in which to consider their action. He said he might make a statement tomorrow.

Records Asked

Johnson and Borah requested records of the Geneva conference called by President Coolidge in 1927. Johnson also asked several questions and for "all letters, papers, documents, telegrams, dispatches and communications of every sort leading up to or relating to the London conference or the London treaty.

In a letter delivered to Borah today, Stimson said he was forwarding documents already published with respect to the 1927 conference and confidential memorandum, "which will answer as far as possible the questions contained in Senator Johnson's letter of June 3."

"Respecting the other papers called for," Stimson told Borah, "I am directed by the President to say that their production would not, in his opinion, be compatible with the public interests."

Statement Made.

While Borah was making his letter public without comment, the state department issued a statement by Stimson defending and explaining the refusal to comply with Johnson's request.

Stimson said he realized opponents of the treaty "are likely to say that these confidential papers are being kept confidential in order to cover up some secret understanding or some mistake or indiscretion of the American delegates. That is nonsense. There were no such agreements or understandings.

"There are no commitments made by the American delegation except those contained in the treaty itself, which is public and before the senate. That paper represents the full measure of the American rights and obligations, and the work of the delegation must be judged by that."

TARIFF FATE HANGS UPON TWO VOTES

WASHINGTON, June 6.—UP—The tariff bill tonight appeared to hang on two Senate votes, one of them Senator Grundy's.

Coalition leaders after a canvass reported the lineup now is 49 for and 47 against, but indicated they were still working for the two more necessary to beat the measure. A vote next week in both houses is virtually certain. Parliamentary action was taken today which will enable the tariff conferees to consolidate the two conference reports. This will result in a single final vote in each house instead of two votes.

Grundy, the jovial Pennsylvania Republican manufacturer whose complaint is that the bill doesn't go far enough, has been absent from Washington since he was defeated by Labor Secretary Davis in the state senatorial primary. His colleague, Senator Reed, also has said the bill is bad, but some changes have been made since, and most observers feel that both Pennsylvania men will vote 'Yea" on the final roll call. Grundy was paired in favor of the bill when it passed March 24.

Doubtful Solons

Other doubtful senators are King Dem., Utah; Cutting, Repn. N. M. and possibly Pittman, Dem., Nev. King was paired against it on passage, and Pittman voted for it. Since then the Senate conferees have removed Pittman's favorite item, a rate on silver.

Changes made by the conferees, including the elimination of the Senate amendments repealing the flexible provision and imposing a farm export debenture bounty, are expected to cause eight other senators to switch and oppose it. These expected changes include Borah, Repn., Idaho; Bratton, Dem., N. M. Brookhart, Repn. Iowa; Copeland, Dem., N. Y.; Frazier, Repn. N. D.; Howell, Repn. Neb.; Nye, Repn., N. D., and Schall, Repn, Minn.

The bill was passed March 24 by a vote of 53 to 31, with 12 senators equally divided on pairs, making the lineup 89 to 37.

Curtis Sure

In a 48 to 48 tie, Vice President Curtis presumably would vote for the bill and pass it.

The Senate plans to begin debate Monday, and there is a possibility of a vote immediately thereafter. Debate on the bill has languished

"Mix Those Babies Up!"

ONCE upon a time there was a Girl Who Had Nothing To Do But Work—

If you doubt it, read the frank, sympathy-inspiring letter which she has written us, as follows:

"This is not a 'sob' story.

"But just a mere statement of facts—

"Facts which are true not only of me but of many another girl.

"I was nineteen years old a few days ago.

"And in this supposedly short period of years I have experienced the following:

"Went to a grammar school.

"Went to high school, graduating at the age of sixteen.

"While in high school, at the age of twelve and a half, I worked in a department store on Saturdays

"In order to have carfare for school, as well as stationery and other things.

"At the age of fifteen and a half I worked evenings at a five-and-ten

"In order to earn money and aid the family.

"During the summer I worked in factories,

"Which was VERY pleasant indeed!

"Oh, how I hated it!

"This regime of work continued all through high school.

"I often walked to school to save fare.

"I also went to Iebrew High School in order to get a bit more education and culture.

"Immediately upon leaving High I started to work, of course.

"I've gone to college in the evening.

"I'm still going, making an attempt at a career

"Which, I wonder, will ever materialize?

"I'm so tired of working hard!

"Even at business I haven't got a decent break.

"I've always had to work late or hard.

"In fact, I often have had to rush to school without supper

"In order to get there in time to make my classes.

"During the three years I've been working

"I have never, for some reason or other, had a vacation.

"One year it was because I had not been working long enough at that particular office.

"Another year I was too busy and simply couldn't get away.

"This year, when I thought I would really get a vacation,

"I'm told to-day that they are going to take the job I'm holding

"And divide it in two, as it is too much for one girl,

"And give it to two girls at a much lower salary.

"Their budget does not allow for me.

"Since I don't care to work at so low a salary,

"And I'm out of a job.

"Huh, it makes me laugh—

"After you give all your energy, everything which you are capable of putting into a position,

"How calmly you are given two weeks' notice to leave!

"I am just one of the many girls in the world with such experience.

"I have simply summed up everything in order to give you an idea

"Of what life consists to people like me.

"So why not let other girls have the swimming and dancing and riding—

"Why not let them enjoy their cars and college life?

"Others of us are having all the hard knocks and equalizing the balance.

"I know that I, personally, am having the hard knocks for at least a dozen others.

"And it makes me feel better to know some one is enjoying life."

It once upon a time there was a Girl Who Had Nothing To Do But Play—

All through her childhood she played happily.

With only the minimum of study, and special tutoring to help her into college,

Without even household duties, to say nothing of work outside her home.

She enjoyed every sport, she went to lots of parties,

She had a perfectly easy, happy, glorious time for some sixteen or seventeen years—

Only, when she finally went away to college, her troubles began.

Since never in her life had she had real work to do—

Never in her life had she been on her own responsibility for getting things done efficiently and on time—

Since she had always been allowed to follow the pleasant line of least resistance,

And had never been obliged, by her parents or by circumstances,

To grit her teeth and do what she didn't want to do

At times when she wanted to do something else—or when she felt too tired to do anything at all—

Because, in short, she had had no training in toil,

She got into all sorts of trouble with the ordered, inflexible, application-demanding curriculum of the modern college,

Which has no use for drones, however attractive and charming.

She was warned, first, but she didn't take the warning seriously—

In the past she had always been protected against the logical but painful consequences

Of her own indolence and lack of earnestness,

And it simply didn't occur to her that life would ever fail to treat her so considerately.

So, finally, she was fired from her first job, the job of college,

And thought herself tremendously ill-used.

Because it was "the thing" for girls in her crowd to "do something,"

She took a typewriting course and got a job

Which almost paid for her carfares and lunches—until she was fired from that.

Even at this job SOME work had to be done—and the girl had never learned how!

She might have married, but young men are learning that they cannot afford her type,

And, at last accounts, she was dawdling at home—

As bored and bitter, if not so tired, as the Girl Who Had Nothing To Do But Work.

It seems obvious, to any sympathetic woman,

That neither of these girls has had a square deal—

All work and no play makes Jill as dull as Jack,

But all play and no work makes Jill useless and, in the end, hopeless.

What should have been done with those two girls was what the nurse, Little Buttercup, did in "Pinafore"—

What really was needed was to "mix those babies up!"

Every growing girl requires a balanced ration of work and play—

And it's just as bad business for her to be cheated of one as of the other!

Oh, Go to Bed

By Eliot Kays Stone

"DAD, what's a social climber?"

"A person of a lower grade of society who is trying to get into a higher grade, usually by the ostentatious display of wealth?"

"What's the ostentatious display of wealth?"

"Spending money in such a way that it is obvious that one is very wealthy."

"Why does a social climber want to do that?"

"I've told you, because he or she wants to break into a smarter social set."

"Is one smart who spends money that way?"

"I don't think so."

"Why is it a smarter set if you have to be a fool to get into it?"

"Oh, go to bed."

You and Your Child

By Irma Morris

Whose Job Is It?

"I CAN'T get my little girl up in the morning," a mother complained. "I call her, and call her, and take the bed clothes off, and do everything I can think of. I have a terrible time every morning."

After ascertaining that the child went to bed early at night and that, therefore, sleepiness was not the cause of her reluctance to get out of bed, I advised this mother to have a heart to heart talk with her little eight-year-old and to put the job of getting up in the morning squarely on her shoulders. Tell her, I counselled, that you have to prepare breakfast and do many other chores, and that you feel she is big enough and capable enough to shoulder the job of getting ready for school herself. Tell her, also, that you will call her once and no more, and that if she doesn't get up she will have to take the consequences of being late to school. And then, I further advised, stick to your word; call the child once, and then go about your business, leaving her to attend to hers. A few weeks later the mother joyfully reported that this method had worked wonderfully, that her child had assumed all responsibility of getting ready for school in a startlingly capable manner!

Most children rise to responsibility. They love to be independent and to show us how well they can put through a job. They delight in the feeling of adequacy which comes from accomplishment, and they are spurred on by our words and smiles of approval. Letting our children assume just as much responsibility as they are capable of makes things easier and more pleasant for us, as it frees us from many duties and does away with much nagging and fussing. And even more important, it is splendid character training for the children, developing initiative, self-confidence, skill and a happy disposition.

Our children are capable of assuming many of their own jobs. Many mothers who formerly nagged and punished their young ones, in getting them to perform their manifold little duties on arising in the morning and before going to bed at night, now give them lists of the things to be done, and have them check off the items on the lists as they do them. They have found that their children love the feel of independence and responsibility which this gives them, and that their tasks are quickly and joyously accomplished.

Give your children a chance to assume responsibility. They will, I feel confident, rise to the trust you repose in them!

To-Day's Good Manners

By Millicent James

Copyright Press Publishing Company (New York World) 19.

GARDNER, aged ten, was reprimanded for holding his fork awkwardly. "Aw," he said, "I know better. I don't eat that way except at home."

It isn't only children who need to be reminded that every-day manners and company manners should be the same thing. In these hurry-up times grown-ups are that way often and in need of an occasional warning. "Mind your manners," especially among those at the family table. Of course, where there is no waitress or other service, some latitude must be allowed in various directions, but there need be very little, if any, relaxation of the code of good manners.

Bouillon is sipped or drunk from the side of the cup. Soup is eaten with the spoon dipped away from one, and it is not at all out of place to tip the plate—so it is tipped away from one—to get the last spoonful. Soup or bouillon is cooled not by blowing on it—to do that is to commit one of the unpardonable crudities. Instead, it is to be sipped from the spoon until cool and then, in the case of bouillon, drunk from the cup.

More than one person has refused olives which she "just loved" because she knew neither where to put the olives once she had taken them when they were passed, nor the pits after she had eaten the olives. If there are bread and butter plates, the olives and the pits are put on them; if there are not, on the side of the dinner plate. Two olives are taken at a time and with the fingers, unless an olive spoon or fork is provided, which is not at all essential nowadays.

Salted nuts, candied ginger or rose leaves similarly are put on the bread and butter plates. In passing salt or pepper, or the milk or sugar, they should be set on the table, to be taken up by the person for whom they are destined.

Unless there happen to be individual salt dishes, salt is taken from the dish with the tiny spoon, carried to the side of the bread and butter plate, then radishes or celery are dipped in as eaten. These and artichokes are the only vegetables eaten with the fingers, and lest some one says "What about corn on the cob?" I answer in advance that corn on the cob, while it should be eaten from the fingers of both hands, should also be eaten in solitary retirement, or at least strictly en famille. It really shouldn't be served at a company dinner, not if the succulent vegetable it is to be thoroughly enjoyed.

Dry cheeses may be eaten from the fingers, soft ones with a fork, and whether it's cheese or artichokes, roast beef, fruit or a gelatine dessert, small mouthfuls are the rule. It is surprising how frequently and by whom this particular rule is transgressed—that and trying to carry on a conversation with the mouth too full for utterance.

In being served from a dish requiring a spoon and a fork, as certain types of desserts, or with meats when the sauce occupies the same dish, the fork is held in the left, the spoon in the right, hand, and as is frequently done now, a spoon and fork are both provided with certain desserts, either one preferred being used—or both. This is another custom cribbed from our British friends.

Asked to state a preference for one of two kinds of food, as for instance the white or dark meat of chicken, it is no longer correct to protest that "it makes no difference," particularly if there is a preference. "White, please," or "I'd like a little of each," or whatever actually suits the occasion; for this is as good a place as any to put in the reminder that after all is said and done about good manners, they are all founded on "kindly consideration," and to make your preference known to your hostess is just that "kindly consideration."

Having finished a meal, it isn't "nice" either to push the plates away from one, to make futile gestures with the crumbs, to toy with the water glass or the silver, or to snoulge in any of those restless, nervous movements, and as napkin rings have been consigned to oblivion or to the "old silver" chest, the napkin is laid, half folded, at the right of the plate.

What Baby Needs

By Emilie Hoffman

Copyright Press Publishing Company (New York World) 1930

HANDLE the baby only when absolutely necessary!

Observe regularity in every detail connected with your baby!

These are two rules every mother should learn and conscientiously follow:

Infants should be kept quiet at all times but this is particularly essential to their welfare in warm weather. Many mothers fail to consider the fact that a baby's brain grows more during the first year than throughout the remainder of life—the development of the brain is more rapid than any other part of the body during infancy, hence the baby's life should be one of peace, quiet and absolute comfort.

It is for this reason that children require a vast amount of undisturbed sleep. A baby should be awakened only to take nourishment, and this is one of the details that demand regularity. Feed by the clock and never allow the infant to sleep past the regular feeding time. Picking up a baby just because you feel like fondling him or handling him at all hours to satisfy admiring visitors is positive cruelty to children.

There is nothing wrong with your baby if he sleeps all the time during the first few weeks.

He needs at least twenty hours of sleep in the first month and he must have not less than sixteen hours up to his first birthday. Twelve of these should be at night. After six months, in some cases earlier, a child can be put to bed at 6 P. M. and not be disturbed until 6 A. M. Six o'clock is a good bedtime for infants and there must be one or two daytime naps up to the fourth year and longer, if possible. Regular hours for sleep should be strictly adhered to. The daytime naps should be taken out-of-doors for fresh air acts like a tonic to the baby's system.

When one considers the many disturbances an infant is subjected to by his family it is not surprising that so many of them are restless and feverish and suffer from indigestion. Every time you toss or jounce a baby you are putting a strain on its nervous system. So during these warm months observe the two rules given above. Keep your baby cool, clean, absolutely quiet and let him sleep to his heart's content, then you will be giving him the chance to develop and every infant needs that chance, especially during the summer.

Don't Eat When Tired

YOU have probably often heard that one should never eat when tired. When you come home from business limp and tired, and perhaps somewhat very much cross, you say, "I don't want anything to eat," but you do force down some food and there is where you are laying the foundation for impaired digestion and future ill health.

Your overtired condition is probably not due to over-exertion but to the poisonous matter that has accumulated in your muscles and entire system throughout the day which causes a muscular and mental fatigue and eating under these conditions is dangerous to health.

A little light exercise would clear the mind, then a shower and rub-down would stimulate the entire system and remove the poisons and followed by a rest period of from one-half to one hour would quiet the over-strained nerves and re-establish normal digestion.

Then it is safe to eat, but it is not advisable to eat an over-hearty meal under these conditions; however, you will enjoy your meal and will not be taking chances on your health by forcing yourself to eat.

The Beauty Shop

Cultivate Summer Serenity

WHEN you go out East to Egypt and to Syria you are struck immediately by the beautiful calm of the faces all about you. The heat is almost insupportable, the sky a hard bright blue without the least promise of a cloud. Cross an open court yard any time between the hours of 12 and 3, and the sun stings feet and skin and brain. You, the Occidental, go a little sick at all this cruel weather, but the native sons and daughters move softly and with a lofty smile.

And you know this high serenity of the Oriental stamps his face with an unforgettable beauty, even when his features are homely and his skin crinkled and old. This lofty calm makes the faces of the women sweet beyond imagining.

Ascribe such looks to Oriental philosophy or to Oriental heat or to the two combined, which latter seems most reasonable, but let us take a lesson from it. For the sake of our comfort during the approaching torrid days—and for the sake of our faces forever. All other things being equal, serenity is the secret of a wrinkleless skin and the key to beauty of facial expression. It is of the very essence of charm.

Let us cultivate serenity, especially at this season, when it holds so much practical value for us. Serenity is the talent for floating above annoyances, especially the petty ones that burn most of us up.

Let us move with calm and deliberation instead of nervous haste. Let us supplant worry with faith and jealousy, envy and hatred with love. Let us make a point of seeking happiness out of little everyday things. One finds it nowhere else, anyway—that is, permanent happiness.

Let us surround ourselves always with beauty, flowers, satisfying colors, happy, soothing music. For, heaven knows, we who live amid the cacophony of cities have need of quiet, kindly beauty of flowers and color and soothing sounds, don't we?

And all these things shall mirror themselves upon our faces, shall look back on the world from our eyes, shall manifest themselves in our bearing, our every movement, the very tones of our voices.

And when others fret and swelter and get wrinkles in their foreheads, our store of beauty, our achievement of serenity shall keep us good-looking and cool!

Cure for the Club Husband

A WIFE who is "sick and tired of spending evenings at home alone" asks whether she can be blamed if she returns home to her mother, where she can go as she pleases. She concludes: "Do warn girls against marrying men that are popular. They are too much in demand at clubs. He has always been so, but I thought after we were married he would give up these pleasures."

Right there is where the big mistake was made. This matter should have been discussed and satisfactorily settled before the wedding day, and if this proved futile there should have been no wedding day for that union.

Before returning to mother, why not make an effort to become a strong rival to the club? Then you will probably not be sitting alone evenings. Start by inviting a couple to dinner and suggest a card game afterward. Gather a small coterie of mutual friends—have two or three different ones—and plan a couple of evenings for cards, another for movies or theatre, and so on.

If you do this tactfully it will work splendidly, and hubby will wonder why married men spend all their leisure time at the club.

When Buying The Gift

A MAN wanted to show his esteem for his mother, so he sent her a gift on Mother's Day. His sister suggested a negligee cap. He bought an exquisite lace and ribbon creation and paid ten dollars for it. Ten dollars was none too much for his mother, for she must have the best.

When the dear old lady received the gift she regarded it in amazed admiration and she kept it carefully guarded in the box in which it came. It was too handsome to wear; it did not fit in with her other wearing apparel nor her home environment, so while it was a beautiful article it was a useless gift.

For $10 the son could have purchased a robe and matching cap and, perhaps, even comfy slippers that would have made a practical gift for his mother, therefore would have delighted her and given her much comfort.

It is not the amount of money you spend for a gift, but how you spend it that counts from the standpoint of pleasure and satisfaction—and these are the two requisites of the perfect gift.

Creating Form Illusions

A SIZE thirty-six dress, just because the dimensions are increased to a size forty-six, does not become a slenderizing dress nor does it create any illusion.

When the bust is large, the use of diagonal lines above the waistline suggests greater length and smaller bust width, is the hint from Margaret Story in "Individuality and Clothes." A narrow diagonally crossed flesh-colored vestee slenderizes the bust, and a horizontal line across the bust can be broken in many ways.

Bulging, lack of firmness of contour, and tight effects are to be avoided. A well-fitted brassiere should mold rather than restrict the figure.

The full fichu or front frill worn directly in the centre of the figure should be discarded by any but the woman with a flat chest.

If the shoulders are round and large, forego yoke and horizontal lines, also kimono sleeves unless the line across the back is broken by vertical tucks or other decoration.

A centre-back, pointed toward the wast, a continuation of a small well-fitted standing collar as seen in the fur collars of coats, decreases size. A narrow central panel breaks the width of the back effectively. The very large sleeve gives a disastrous spread of wings.

TELLING THE WORLD

By Neal O'Hara

Copyright Press Publishing Company (New York World) 1930

GETTING AHEAD IN THE WORLD

(Congratulations are pouring in by mail, freight and radio on our enterprise in printing home lessons for ambitious people. Many who started studying our courses last week are already going up the ladder, especially those who enrolled in house painting. Perhaps the best example of rapid promotion is that reported by Mr. Ralph Lumsden of West Seaweed, N. J. A week ago Mr. Lumsden was employed in a soup kitchen. After studying our home instructions he secured employment at the Matteawan Asylum as a guard. Thus, in the short space of one week he went from soup to nuts. This is believed to constitute an indoor record for something or other—probably the latter. Hundreds of those who are taking these courses have written in for the college yell. This is withheld for the present, as we do not believe in letting outside activities interfere with our students' studies. Suffice to say, our college yell is a good one and so intricate any grown-up idiot can learn it—and probably will. To-day's instalment gives complete instructions in the profession of window washing in large buildings. It is just the course for persons who have had experience on the outside looking in.)

HOW TO BECOME A WINDOW WASHER

(In one and no-100ths lessons)

WINDOW washing in high buildings is an ideal profession for any one who wishes to be looked up to. In addition to being handy with a pail of water and a sponge, a window washer must maintain a lofty character and an impeccable reputation. For a window washer who makes just one slip practically ruins his career.

The symptoms of window washing are easily recognized. It often begins with a pane and ends with sudden death.

But the way to get a start in the window bathing trade is to secure a pail of water and a sponge and apply to the superintendent of a tall building. Have faith in yourself and be persistent. After showing your credentials and being careful not to spill them on the superintendent's floor, casually say to him, "What's the chances for a window washer on the eleventh floor?"

The chances are that he will say, "Nope. I've got a window washer for there." Then inquire, "Well, how about the eighteenth floor?" No again, maybe. "How about the twenty-third floor?" Probably another no. "How about the thirty-first floor?" Still no. But do not give up hope. Inquire about the thirty-second, the thirty-third, the thirty-fourth floor, &c., until he cries, "Ah, that's another story, as Kipling says." Then you get the job.

When you start in as an outdoor window washer the first thing you do is look for banana peels on the window ledge.

Another thing one should observe are traffic regulations. A window washer is liable to arrest for knocking down a pedestrian by falling on him. Even if the pedestrian is jaywalking, that is no excuse for the window washer if he falls. And always have your identification papers with you in case of a little mishap like this. It often helps, especially with a savage traffic cop.

Now, to be a success in this profession you should also learn what the well dressed window washer is wearing this year. It will be found that the really smart plate glass masseur prefers a safety belt to suspenders. It is true that as a rule suspenders are better for formal events. But if a window washer is going to trip the light cataclysmic he will find the safety belt is best.

The more fastidious window washers also affect rubber heels. These often take the jar out of a sudden fall. Yes, rubber heels are very good up to the third floor. After that they are simply a matter of taste.

(Next week: Another huge instalment on how to get ahead in the world.)

GOLDEN DAWN

by MARC O'FARRELL

Copyright 1930, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.
This story is based on Warner Bros. Vitaphone production of the play by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II.

SYNOPSIS

Golden Dawn, mystery girl, is about to be burned alive by the African black tribe. She has failed, as the mystic wife of the black god Malunghu, to divert the drought and bring rain. She is really a white girl, Tom Allen, her sweetheart, shipped to England by a ruse of a rival, Shep Keyes, has returned. Shep, whip-man, has incited the natives to burn Dawn. Double-crossing, he comes to her, and tells her that, at the price of her running off with him to the jungles, he will aid her escape. Tom informs the British commandant of Dawn's white birth: he gets permission to visit Mombassa to get verifying facts.

INSTALLMENT THIRTY-TWO

"Well," he finally said, "either he's got to stop his visits or I shall. I do not like ghosts. Indeed, they can't even grow upon me. After all, Mooda, this is the twentieth century and——"

His words were arrested by a shrill shriek from Mooda. Looking up at her, he beheld her staring in terror at a shabby old man who had entered. The black woman seemed unable to take her eyes off him. She suddenly collapsed in hysteria, sank into a chair opposite the unhappy Duke and began to moan as if in pain.

Meantime the old man who had occasioned all the excitement remained oblivious to it. Ignored by the waiter, he sat silent at the table, peering about as if expecting somebody. To Duke he seemed before. He suspected that she was on the point of a significant confession.

"Now that I think of it," he observed with exaggerated casualness, "it seems to me I've heard of this ghost along the water front."

Quickly Mooda uplifted her head. "Yes," she said, her voice still quavering with fright, "every place I go sing he come. He follow me from place to place. Now he come here."

"I see," commented Duke. "What is he looking for you?"

Frenziedly Mooda seized the Englishman's arms in her denial that his quest was for her.

"No, no, no!" she cried. "He look for Dawn."

"Dawn?"

"Yes, that white man is Dawn's father."

Although he anticipated an admission quite as startling, Duke nevertheless found himself amazed at the woman's confession. He recalled his vow to Tom Allen to look out for Dawn, to transmit Tom's avowal to return for her.

"Then Dawn is white?" he said.

"Many Englishmen come to Africa," Mooda replied cryptically. "Not all go back like you—and Tom Allen."

"Then that man," said Duke, "if he is Dawn's father, is your husband. Is that right?"

Mooda turned her eyes upon him, as if to acknowledge the relationship. But before she could speak, the man returned to the room. With another shriek, Mooda rose and rushed toward the bar room.

Upon their arrival in Mombasa, Tom and Pigeon forthwith began their search o the waterfront dives for Mooda. It was difficult to acquire clues, since Mooda was not known by name in any of the places, even in those where she had been employed. Along the waterfront, jungle women were merely jungle women and nothing more. Managers were shrewd enough to suppose that what the spendthrift sailors sought was local color, so they hired the black entertainers and permitted the patrons to call them what they wished.

The transience of the patronage also made the search difficult. Nobody paused in port long enough to establish any enduring relationship with Mooda. In one place, a four bar room which served as a refuge for pickpockets and assorted thugs, they met one of Mooda's employers.

"Yes," he said, "I know who you mean. A big woman that thought she owned the earth. She was always braggin', when she was drunk, about her daughter bein' a goddess."

"That's the one," said Tom eagerly. "Mooda, wasn't that her name?"

"Search me," returned the man indifferently. "They're all just Blacky to me."

"Where did she go?" Tom asked.

"I don't know. She got kind of nutty around here, always yellin' about ghosts. I threw her out. I hated to do it, because she was a good performer. She's probably got a job in one of the places around the harbor."

But after visiting several places Tom began to despair of finding the black woman. He feared that, weary of Mombasa and of working in those disreputable bar rooms, Mooda had progressed to another place, perhaps to another jungle settlement. Pigeon, who had acquired a headache and a bad temper from the wretched liquor and foul air, urged Tom to appeal to the police.

"Now," Tom disapproved, "this is war time and there would be a lot of bother about establishing her identity, and such matters. We must not forget that our time is brief. We must find her ourselves."

Meantime, Mooda, her courage restored by steady devotion to the bottle, was losing her fear of the forlorn little man. Duke remained at the place, drinking floods of porter and hoping for some development. After admitting that the stranger was the father of Dawn, Mooda had stayed in the bar room, avoiding Duke. However, it was part of her job to circulate among the patrons, and eventually she returned to Duke's table. The father of Dawn still sat where she had left him.

She seated herself opposite Duke, placing the bottle of liquor before her. She poured herself a generous drink and consumed it in a gulp. Duke perceived that she was quite drunk. He was relieved, for he knew her condition would prevent any further hysteria.

The old man also appeared to have been waiting for her. Observing that she had returned, he rose and crossed to her, his eyes again fixed on her accusingly.

"Your eyes are black," he said to Mooda, "but the eyes of her mother were blue."

"You'll never see your daughter again," rejoined Mooda with the bluntness born of drunkenness. "No white man ever see her." She laughed and poured herself another drink.

Stork Delays Planned Hike

GRAF LANDS AT HOME PORT

FREIDRICHSHAFEN, Germany, June 6—UP—The Graf Zeppelin dodged terrific storms today to complete an 18,000 mile voyage, linking three continents in 19 days.

A tremendous ovation greeted the dirigible as it appeared over Freidrichshafen and Lake Constance at 7:10 p. m. (1:10 P. M., E.S.T(. Thousands of members of the German Automobile club, making a special run to this city from all parts of the land, joined with Freidrichshafen residents in cheering Germany's greatest single implement of international good will.

The Zeppelin landed at 7:25 p. m., bring to an end a series of voyages which began here May 18 and included two stops at Seville, Spain, and Pernambuco, Brazil, and single halts at Rio de Janiero and Lakehurst, N. J. Five minutes later the expert German ground crew had walked the big craft into its hangar.

Dr. Hugo Eckener, commander, said the whole trip had been most successful and had served to clarify many hitherto unsolved questions concerning transoceanic flying. The passengers, many of whom made the entire voyage, said they enjoyed their travel and felt well.

The last stage of the journey, from Seville to Freidrichshafen, took 24 1-2 hours, instead of the 20 Eckener had expected. Going out of his way to escape rainstorms in Spain, the commander piloted the Graf on the circuitous route over the Mediterranean and up the Rhone valley to France, only to run into a dangerous mistral in the region of Lyons.

He turned the Graf's tail to the storm and maneuvered around the zone of peril, crossing into Switzerland, over Neuchatel and proceeding over Zurich before reaching Lake Constance. Just before striking the Swiss border, he passed west of Lons-le-Saunier, 50 miles from Dijon, doing 50 miles an hour at an altitude of 1,300 feet, while black skies threatened and a fierce wind blew.

The Graf's course from Seville lay southward to Cadiz, southeast through rain squalls to Gibraltar and thence along the southeastern coast of Spain and over the Balearic Islands.

Clubwomen At Meeting Pass Dry Resolution

DENVER, Colo., June 6.—UP—The 20th biennial convention of the general federation of Women's clubs proceeded rapidly today with a crowded program in its first general business sessions.

Reports of officers and committees were submitted in rapid succession to the delegates, gathered in the Denver municipal auditorium, and were approved by unanimous vote.

A bone dry prohibition resolution was placed before the convention by Mrs. Walter W. Seymour of Chicago, chairman of the resolutions committee, in a preliminary report of her committee.

A round of applause followed the reading of the resolution and gave evidence of the expected action of the convention when it is brought up for vote tomorrow. The prohibition demonstration was the longest of the day's sessions.

The resolution declared "sinister influences are seeking to undermine the Eighteenth amendment and to render the laws for its enforcement impotent."

A most encouraging sign in the federation movement is the closer union of the clubs of the country, Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, of Brocton, Mass., first vice president, told the convention.

"Most gratifying work has been done in opening the doors of our club membership to the women of other lands," she said. "It is a far-flung family, for the sun never sets upon our membership."

"What's the News"

WHEN COLUMBUS and his caravels returned from the New World, the first question shouted from the shore was, "What's the News?"

That's always the question of paramount importance. Years ago folks asked it of the post rider, the soldier returned from the wars, the man who had been down to the settlements, or the neighbor back from the general store.

Today, you find the answer in your newspaper. Through the newspapers the news of the world and of the community quickly becomes public knowledge. And remember this—it takes two kinds of news to make a modern paper complete.

The first tells of happenings near and far — or fires, sports, elections, accidents, marriages, deaths, great men, great events.

The second tells of things you eat, wear and use — things you buy, things being sold to your friends and neighbors. This news is advertising.

It's just as important to keep up to date on the advertising in this paper as it is to read about what's doing in the world of events.

Advertising is an essential news service
It is distinctly to your advantage
to be guided by it.
